U2 Ultimate Etiquette School
Ages 7-12

A and B sit at a table, waiting for food to be served. A sits upright, hands folded on lap. B is hunched over the plate, holding a knife and a fork in each hand.

B Dinner! Dinner! Come on, Ma, where's the food?

A (speaking distinctly) Please. Have some respect for the chef. Surely you want properly cooked food.

B You good in the head?

A It's "Are you alright in the head," and slang is so improper.

B You go to Boot Camp or somethin'?

A Mother sent me for a wonderful, educational week to the Ultimate Etiquette School in New Hampshire.

B Whad'ya do there?

A I learned proper behavior and social etiquette. (leans in and whispers) Like how to bet the pot and score big on the flop... and everyone thinks I'm the good one.

B But you're acting so lame.

B imitates A's perfect posture and folds his hands as A has done, mocking his behavior.

A Trust me, it's the perfect cover. You should give it a try.

B Whatcha' mean...like... (speaking distinctly) It is quite good, quite good. Perhaps we need another week at the Ultimate Etiquette School in New Hampshire.

A Now that is more like it. Elbows off the table, here comes dinner. Bon Appetite!
